An Unforgettable Lesson

In my grade school days, some of my classmates and I would spend our lunch money at the store close to the school. After the meal, we'd walk around, talking and laughing for the rest of the lunch hour. A girl named Nancy was usually with us. But on that particular day she wasn't there, and as we chatted away, we ended up talking about Nancy. Since opinions about her all seemed to be negative, I added, "Nancy isn't very smart, either. She's always asking others for their homework."

When she saw me the next day, Nancy asked, "Did you say you thought I wasn't very smart?" As I stood there looking Nancy in the face, I wished a thousand times that I could take back my cruel words. As I began to answer Nancy's question I experienced the worst feeling that I had ever had up to that point in my life.

In an apologetic voice I answered, "Yes, Nancy, I said it. But I'm truly sorry." Nancy accepted my apology. But that day as I stood there, with my heart in my throat, I learned a lesson: Never say anything about someone that you wouldn't want them to hear.

Part III Section C

Ever since I was very small, I've had the sense that I ought to be somewhere else. I remember watching trains (36) flash by and wishing I was on (37) board. I remember going to the (38) airport with my parents when I was 13 and reading the destinations board, seeing all the places that I could go to: Los Angeles, Chicago, London.

But the trains passed by and the planes took off without me, so I (39) wandered the world through books. I went to Victorian England in the (40) pages of Middlemarch and Little Princess, and to St. Petersburg before the (41) fall of the tsar (沙皇) with Anna Karenina.

My home was in a (42) pleasant place outside Philadelphia. But I really lived, truly lived, somewhere else. I lived within the (43) covers of books. In books I traveled, not only to other worlds, but into my own. (44) I learned who I was and who I wanted to be, what I might achieve, and what I might dare to dream about my world and myself.

I travel today in the way I once dreamed of traveling as a child — on airplanes and in trains. And the irony (具有讽刺意味的事) is that I don't care for it very much. (45) I am the sort of person who prefers to stay at home, surrounded by family, friends, and books. The only thing I do like about traveling is the time on airplanes spent reading.

(46) It turns out that when my younger self thought of taking wing, she wanted only to let her spirit soar. Books are the plane, and the train, and the road. They are the real destinations, and the journey too. They are home.

Part I Writing (30 minutes)

Directions: For this part, you are allowed 30 minutes to write a composition on the topic On Keeping Pets. You should write at least 120 words, and base your composition on the outline given in Chinese below.

1. 有人喜欢养宠物，也有人反对养宠物，他们都有各自的道理
2. 我的看法

On Keeping Pets

In almost every neighborhood, there are people who like pets and people who don't. The former group of people think that pets are good and helpful companions. Some of them even go so far as saying that animals are as good as humans, and their rights should be respected. Those who hate pets say that animals are noisy, dirty and dangerous. They think laws should be made to forbid people from keeping dogs and cats in cities and towns. The different opinions on keeping pets, which reflect personal preferences, have caused many disputes and much unpleasantness among people who are close neighbors.

Personally I do not like pets. But I think we should learn to respect the rights of pet lovers. We have no right to forbid people to keep pets in their homes, as long as the animals are properly taken care of and do not threaten the safety and peace of others.

Part III Section C

I was 14 when Mr. Ingram hired me as a farmhand. It was the first time I was (36) actually paid for work.

One day Mr. Ingram (37) found an old truck that was (38) stuck in the soft, sandy soil of our field. It was full of melons that someone had tried to steal (39) before his truck got bogged down.

Mr. Ingram (40) explained that the truck's owner would be returning soon, and he wanted me to (41) watch and learn. It wasn't long before a local guy with a terrible (42) reputation for fighting showed up with his two (43) full-grown sons. They looked really angry.

Calmly Mr. Ingram said, "Well, I see you want to buy some watermelons from us."

(44) There was a long silence before the man answered, "Yeah, I guess so. What are you getting for them?"

"Twenty-five cents each."

(45) "Well, I guess that would be fair enough if you help me get my truck out of here."

It turned out to be our biggest sale of the summer, and a nasty, perhaps violent, incident had been avoided. After they left, Mr. Ingram smiled and said to me, (46) "Son, if you don't forgive your enemies, you're going to run out of friends."
